Nonprofit accounting in the modern era

You don't change accounting systems often

However, as your nonprofit grows in size and complexity, you reach a point where manual, time-consuming processes drain your productivity, and flying blind without real-time visibility into key metrics and outcomes is stifling growth. As a good steward, you need a system that leverages the latest technology advancements.

At a minimum, a modern accounting system should automate and streamline core financial management functions such as Accounts Receivable, Accounts Payable, and Financial Close. But you can hardly fuel your growth and need for accountability and transparency by simply automating the minimum. Nonprofits have accounting, tracking, and reporting needs that require specialized functionality in their financial management systems.

Inflexible, inefficient, and outdated on-premises software is rapidly being replaced by a new breed of modern cloud solutions.

The pains of dated technology

In addition to external pressures like increased competition for funding, economic shifts creating more demand for services, and government regulations, challenges with internal processes and technology are also creating barriers to mission success.

In a recent survey conducted by Sage Intacct², nonprofit finance leaders shared the internal and technology frustrations that were serious barriers to mission impact. One person responded about the challenge of operating in technology silos in different functional areas limiting their ability to share information. Another mentioned new board members being unfamiliar with nonprofits and demanding key performance indicators (KPIs) that are not always possible to produce.

Top 5 technology frustrations nonprofit finance leaders are facing

- 1 Lack of process automation and organization efficiencies
- 2 Manual, time-consuming reporting
- 3 Inefficiencies and delays due to multiple, disparate systems
- 4 Lack of real-time visibility into key metrics and performance
- 5 Inability to measure outcome metrics
